Dynamic Duo

Twin Sisters Interiors combines individual strengths to create spaces where owners feel at home

Identical twins and ASID designers Theresa Naramore and Cheryl Green share a talent for transforming spaces. And while they hold similar values, it's their complementary differences that keep clients coming back.

"Cheryl brings out my creativity," says Naramore. "She helps me look at things from another perspective and adds the missing elements to complete the space."

"Theresa reins it all in," notes Green. "She keeps us focused, our projects on track, and our clients happy."

The pair sees design as a reflection of its owners, as demonstrated in a recent project for a couple in San Antonio. The client wanted a home that celebrated the sprawling views of the Texas Hill Country and entertain groups up to 60 people, while feeling cozy enough for nights alone. They also desired a space that could accommodate a growing family when the time arises.

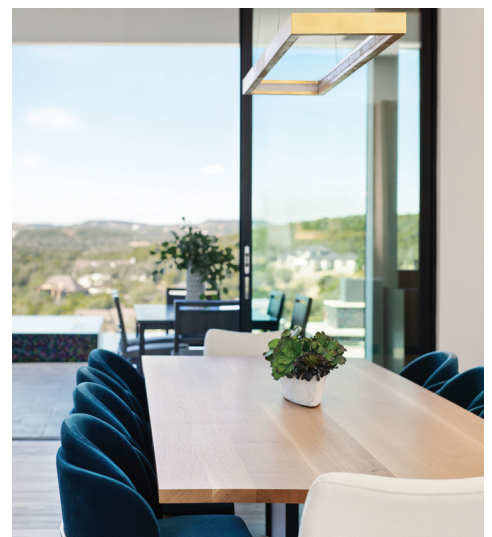

The solution was to use the home's sliding doors and pool area to create functional, free-flowing indoor and outdoor spaces that work together as one large space. Modular furniture and numerous seating areas aid parties of any size. Wood flooring, quartzite countertops, and performance fabrics bring needed durability and create comfortable spaces for guests and family members alike.

For Naramore and Green, the happiness on their clients' faces brings the greatest joy. It's why they started the first Texas chapter of Savvy Giving by Design, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit network that provides transformative living spaces for children undergoing medical treatment.

"We want to create places where people feel at peace," Green concludes.
